HUNTERS TESTIMONY

Sinalopato has put together a first rate bird hunting operation for 23 species of waterfowl White-winged and mourning dove.

In two trips here five years apart, I found superlative accommodations plus excellent gunning to be surprisingly consistent. Many of Bobby Balderrama's (sinalopato owner/outfitter), support staff -drivers, guides, restaurant servers, office people and others-have worked for him for years. All speak English: all are well trained and industrious. Much of Balderrama's business is from repeat costumers. Upon arrival at the gated Plaza Inn, a 15 minute shuttle from Los Mochis International Airport, each guest is greeted with a margarita. Hunting parties returning at noon or after dark also receive hors d'oeuvres. A typical day begins at 5 a.m. with a buffet breakfast at Owens, one of two restaurants. Guides are ready to escort hunters to Suburbans or VANS already loaded with guns, ammo and beverage coolers. A drive of 20 to 50 minutes brings the dove hunters to picked grain fields or mesquite groves in the fertile farming valleys of Los Mochis and El Fuerte for pass-shooting the morning flights. A half hour's drive puts duck hunters into either the Lagoon de Ohuira or Estero de Capoa, lake/marsh matrixes totaling nearly 40,000 acres. Returning at midday, shooters enjoy a bountiful lunch from the full-service menu, nap for an hour or two, and then head out for an afternoon duck or dove hunt. The packages always allow for two hunts spread over a long, full day. The luxurious rooms and suites are especially inviting after evening drinks and a fine meal, which-if requested- will include birds shot that morning or the day before.
